This note looks at trends in the price of petrol and diesel at the pump and before tax, possible reasons for the gap in prices between the two fuels and compares prices and taxes in different countries.

Trends in the pump and pre-tax price of road fuel and other petroleum products are given in DECC's Quarterly energy prices publication. The AA's Fuel Price Reports has daily national average prices. www.petrolprices.com gives daily average prices and local figures. The Hydrocarbon Oils Bulletin from HMRC includes details of changes in duty rates and revenues. The European Commission's Oil Bulletin gives a weekly comparison of pump and pre-tax prices of fuels across the EU. The International Energy Agency's Monthly Energy Prices shows trends in fuel prices for the largest OECD economies. Their Oil Market Report gives background to changes in oil and product prices. Readers may also find the following standard notes useful: Oil prices and Energy price rises and their impact on demand

A new appendix to this note looks at the real cost of petrol since 1920 and the real value of duty and VAT per litre. Prices in April 2012 were just above their earlier post second world war high in real terms -set during the Suez crisis- but still below the real prices charged in 1920 when petrol pumps were first introduced. The total tax on a litre of petrol peaked in summer 2000; the latest rate is just over 10% below this peak.

At the end of January the Office of Fair Trading published a report on competition in the UK road fuel market. UK petrol and diesel sector. An OFT Call for Information This looked at various different aspects of the market including the impact of increased market share of the big four supermarkets, prices differences between neighbouring towns and urban and rural areas, the ability of independents to compete fairly and whether retail prices are quicker to respond to wholesale price rises than price falls. Overall the report concluded that competition in the sector is working well, although they did highlight the lack of pricing information on motorway service stations as a concern and they did not rule out taking action in specific local areas if there is evidence of anti-competitive behaviour.
